

慶應義塾大学 文学部 英語 自習プリント

英語が得意な人のための「私大難関本番レベル」— 翻訳という裏切りを読み
解く

2026 年 5 月 26 日

高校 3 年～既卒 (難関私大文系志望)

英語 (慶應 文学部・本番水準)

Trillion 塾

第1章 (例題 — 慶應 文学部レベル・5 分)

慶應文は 120 分・大問 4-5 題で長文比重が高い。本問は長文 1 題で 35-40 分相当 (文学部の最大ブロック)。

【例題】 (慶應義塾大学 文学部 入試 典型形式・改題)

Read the passage and answer the questions that follow.

The Italian phrase (A) traduttore, traditore — translator, traitor — is one of those puns whose force lies as much in its sound as in its substance. To translate a work, the phrase intimates, is in some measure to betray it: to substitute the resonances of one language for those of another, to be unfaithful to the very thing one purports to serve. The accusation is older than the printed book and has been the standing complaint of every reader who, having known an original in one language, has read it again in a translation that, for all its accuracy, has somehow gone flat.

The intuition behind the complaint is easy to recover. Languages do not merely catalogue the world; they organize it. They draw lines in different places, they hold different distinctions in higher regard, they carry historical sediments — proverbs, allusions, comic registers — that a foreign reader can be expected to recognize only at the cost of footnotes. When the German philosopher's term (B) Geist is rendered as "spirit," something irrecoverable goes missing; when the Japanese poet's seasonal word (C) wabi appears as "rustic simplicity," the translator has both helped and harmed her reader at the same time. To learn a language is to acquire access to texts; to translate them is to dismantle that access and rebuild it in materials that were never designed for the load.

A more sophisticated version of the complaint targets not just the loss of nuance but the very category of equivalence. The philosopher Quine famously imagined a linguist among an unknown people, trying to identify what the native word "gavagai," shouted while a rabbit ran past, meant. Did it pick out the rabbit? The rabbit's spatial part? Its temporal stage? An ongoing event? The data, Quine argued, could not in principle distinguish among these readings. If even the simplest cross-language equation cannot be fixed with certainty, the very idea of a "faithful" translation begins to dissolve into a more modest practice: the production of a text that serves, in its target language, some of the purposes the original served in its source.

Yet to stop here would be to credit only half the story. Translation is also one of the principal means by which literatures expand and renew themselves. Without translation, the European novel would not have absorbed the lessons of the Russian masters of the nineteenth century; without translation, Japanese readers would not have encountered Borges, nor English readers Murakami. Many writers report that some of their most consequential reading was done in translations whose imperfections they did not, at the time, even suspect. To insist on the inadequacy of translation is, in this light, to insist on a standard that, if seriously applied, would impoverish the literary cultures it was supposed to protect.

The deeper picture, then, may be that translation is at once a betrayal and a gift. It does, inescapably, perform a kind of violence on the original: the substitution of one music for another, the unavoidable foregrounding of certain meanings at the expense of others. But it also performs an act of generosity: it gives readers who do not speak a language access to literatures they would otherwise be barred from, and it gives the source literature itself the chance to live an afterlife in tongues its original authors never imagined. To call the translator a traitor is therefore correct as far as it goes, but it captures only the cost of an act whose benefits are at least as great.

The most thoughtful contemporary practitioners take this duality as their starting point. They do not pretend to deliver "the same" text in another language; they offer, instead, a particular reading of the original — a reading shaped by their own moment, their own ear, and the resources of the target language at the time they happen to be writing. Different translators of the same work will, on this view, produce different translations not because some are right and others wrong, but because translation is a form of interpretation, and interpretations multiply as readers and times multiply.

What this means for the reader is a kind of liberation as well as a loss. The reader who acknowledges that no translation can be "the original" is freed to read multiple translations of a difficult work as a kind of conversation about it — each version illuminating what the others have left in shadow. The reader who chases the chimera of a definitive translation is condemned to perpetual disappointment. The reader who accepts the plural is rewarded with access to a literary work that none of the translators, separately, could have provided alone.

Q1. What does the Italian phrase "traduttore, traditore" intimate, according to the first paragraph?

- ① That translators should be financially better compensated.
- ② That to translate a work is in some measure to betray it — to substitute the resonances of one language for those of another.
- ③ That translation should be done only by trained linguists.
- ④ That all original works are inherently flawed.

Q2. Why does the author cite the German term "Geist" and the Japanese word "wabi"?

- ① To recommend that readers learn German and Japanese instead of reading translations.
- ② To illustrate that languages draw distinctions in different places and carry historical sediments that translation cannot fully transfer.
- ③ To argue that only European and Asian languages present this problem.
- ④ To show that all translation is impossible and should be abandoned.

Q3. What more sophisticated criticism of translation does the Quine "gavagai" example illustrate?

- ① That linguists are unreliable witnesses.
- ② That the very category of equivalence between languages is hard to fix with certainty, since the simplest cross-language equation cannot be unambiguously determined.
- ③ That rabbits cannot be accurately described in any language.
- ④ That all translation should be done by computers.

Q4. Why does the author argue that a strict standard of "faithful" translation would "impoverish the literary cultures it was supposed to protect"?

- ① Because translators charge too high a fee for their services.
- ② Because translation is one of the principal means by which literatures expand and renew themselves; without it, major cross-cultural literary exchange would not have occurred.
- ③ Because professional translators have lobbied for tighter copyright laws.
- ④ Because national literatures should remain entirely self-contained.

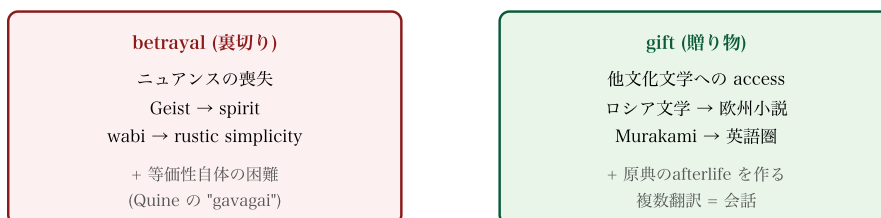

Q5. What is the position of "the most thoughtful contemporary practitioners," according to the sixth paragraph?

- ① They claim to deliver "the same" text in another language with full equivalence.
- ② They acknowledge translation as a form of interpretation shaped by their moment, their ear, and the resources of the target language, so different translators legitimately produce different translations.
- ③ They reject all classical works of literature as untranslatable.
- ④ They translate only into their own native language and refuse all other commissions.

Q6. Which of the following best summarizes the author's overall conclusion?

- ① Readers should give up on translation entirely and learn every relevant language themselves.
- ② Translation is at once a betrayal and a gift; the reader who accepts the plural — reading multiple translations as a conversation — is rewarded with access to a literary work that no single translator could provide alone.
- ③ Translation has been proven mathematically to be impossible.
- ④ Only a definitive, single translation of each great work should be permitted.

翻訳 — 裏切り (loss) と贈り物 (gift) の同時性

著者の結論: 複数翻訳の plural を受け入れた読者が最も豊か

図 1-1 翻訳の二面性 — 裏切り (loss) と贈り物 (gift) の不可分性

第2章 (解法の全体方針と武器整理・3 分)

文学部の長文は「直感的批判 → 哲学的精緻化 → 反対側面の提示 → 二面性の総合 → 実践的含意」の 7 段論法。

【ジャンル分析】

本文は典型的な (A) literary philosophy essay (文学哲学エッセイ)。著者は 7 段かけて、翻訳をめぐる pessimist (Quine 系) と humanist (cultural exchange 派) を統合する。(B) 慶應文の長文 は文学・哲学・言語論が交差するテーマが頻出。

【本問で必要な 4 つの武器】

- ① (A) 具体例の蓄積 を追う (Geist / wabi / gavagai / Borges / Murakami)
- ② (B) 両面性 (duality) の論理 — 裏切り AND 贈り物
- ③ (C) 哲学・文学理論用語 — "resonance" "sediment" "equivalence" "interpretation" "afterlife"
- ④ (D) 著者の立場 = 多元主義的読者擁護 と読む

【各設問の戦略】

Q1 (フレーズの含意) → 第 1 段 "to translate ... is in some measure to betray"

Q2 (修辞設問・例示) → 第 2 段 "languages do not merely catalogue ... organize ... historical sediments"

Q3 (Quine 例) → 第 3 段 "the very category of equivalence ... dissolve"

Q4 (反対側面) → 第 4 段 "translation is also ... means ... literatures expand and renew"

Q5 (現代実践者) → 第 6 段 "form of interpretation, and interpretations multiply"

Q6 (全体結論) → 最終段 "reader who accepts the plural is rewarded"

第3章 (Q1 — traduttore, traditore の含意・3 分)

文学部 Q1 は「外国語フレーズの解釈」を聞く。第 1 段で即決。

【設問】 What does the Italian phrase "traduttore, traditore" intimate?

★ Step 1: 第 1 段の含意

"To translate a work, the phrase intimates, (A) is in some measure to betray it: to substitute the resonances of one language for those of another, to be unfaithful to the very thing one purports to serve."

★ Step 2: paraphrase 対応

本文 "to translate ... is in some measure to betray it ... to substitute the resonances"

選択肢② "to translate a work is in some measure to betray it — to substitute the resonances of one language for those of another"

→ 直接一致。

★ Step 3: 誤答分析

- ・ ① "financially better compensated" → (A) 論点ずれ。
- ・ ③ "done only by trained linguists" → (B) 論点ずれ。
- ・ ④ "all original works are inherently flawed" → 本文と (C) 逆方向。原作ではなく翻訳が裏切る。

【正解】 ② That to translate a work is in some measure to betray it — to substitute the resonances of one language for those of another.

💡 文学部頻出: 多言語の引用 (イタリア語 / ドイツ語 / 日本語) を含むエッセイ。フレーズの音とイメージで解釈する力が問われる。

第4章 (Q2 + Q3 — Geist/wabi 例示 + Quine 例示・10 分)

「具体例による哲学的論証」を2問続けて聞く。文学エッセイの中核。

【Q2 設問】 Why does the author cite the German term "Geist" and the Japanese word "wabi"?

★ 第2段の論理

"Languages do not merely catalogue the world; they (A) organize it. They draw lines in different places, they hold different distinctions in higher regard, they carry (B) historical sediments — proverbs, allusions, comic registers — that a foreign reader can be expected to recognize only at the cost of footnotes."

具体例:

- "When the German philosopher's term Geist is rendered as 'spirit,' something irrecoverable goes missing"
- "when the Japanese poet's seasonal word wabi appears as 'rustic simplicity,' the translator has both helped and harmed her reader at the same time."

★ Q2 paraphrase

本文 "languages ... organize ... different places ... historical sediments ... irrecoverable goes missing"

選択肢② "languages draw distinctions in different places and carry historical sediments that translation cannot fully transfer"

→ 直接対応。

【Q2 正解】 ② To illustrate that languages draw distinctions in different places and carry historical sediments that translation cannot fully transfer.

【Q3 設問】 What more sophisticated criticism does the Quine "gavagai" example illustrate?

★ 第3段の論理

"A more sophisticated version of the complaint targets not just the loss of nuance but (A) the very category of equivalence."

Quine の事例: 言語学者が "gavagai" がウサギを指すのか、ウサギの空間的部分か、時間的段階か、進行中の出来事かを (B) データだけでは原理的に区別できない。

結論: "If even the simplest cross-language equation cannot be fixed with certainty, the very idea of a 'faithful' translation begins to dissolve into a more modest practice."

★ Q3 paraphrase

本文 "the very category of equivalence ... cannot be fixed with certainty ... cross-language equation cannot be unambiguously"

選択肢② "the very category of equivalence between languages is hard to fix with certainty, since the simplest cross-language equation cannot be unambiguously determined"

→ 直接対応。

【Q3 正解】② That the very category of equivalence between languages is hard to fix with certainty, since the simplest cross-language equation cannot be unambiguously determined.

★ 重要観察 — Q2 と Q3 の連動

Q2 = nuance 喪失 (経験的批判) → Q3 = equivalence 不可能性 (哲学的批判)。 (A) 具体例 → 哲学的精緻化は文学部エッセイの典型 2 段ロケット。

翻訳批判の 2 段階 — 経験的 → 哲学的

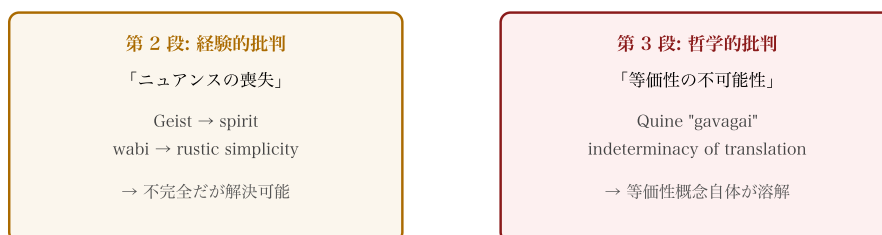

図 5-1 文学エッセイの 2 段批判 — 経験的批判から哲学的批判への深化

第5章 (Q4 — 反対側面 (gift) の提示・5 分)

「Yet」 転換段落を読む。批判から両面性への移行。

【設問】 Why does the author argue that a strict standard of "faithful" translation would "impoverish the literary cultures"?

★ 第 4 段の論理

"Yet to stop here would be to credit only half the story. Translation is also (A) one of the principal means by which literatures expand and renew themselves."

具体例:

- "Without translation, the European novel would not have absorbed the lessons of the Russian masters of the nineteenth century"
- "without translation, Japanese readers would not have encountered Borges, nor English readers Murakami"

結論: "To insist on the inadequacy of translation is ... to insist on a standard that, if seriously applied, would impoverish the literary cultures it was supposed to protect."

★ paraphrase 対応

本文 "translation is also ... means by which literatures expand and renew ... Russian masters / Borges / Murakami"

選択肢② "translation is one of the principal means by which literatures expand and renew themselves; without it, major cross-cultural literary exchange would not have occurred"

→ 直接対応。

★ 誤答分析

- ① "translators charge too high a fee" → (A) 論点ずれ。
- ③ "lobbied for tighter copyright laws" → (B) 論点ずれ。
- ④ "national literatures should remain entirely self-contained" → 本文と (C) 逆方向。

【正解】 ② Because translation is one of the principal means by which literatures expand and renew themselves; without it, major cross-cultural literary exchange would not have occurred.

第6章 (Q5 — 現代実践者の立場・5 分)

「複数翻訳の正当化」を読む。第 6 段で即決。

【設問】 What is the position of "the most thoughtful contemporary practitioners"?

★ 第 6 段の論理

"They do not pretend to deliver 'the same' text in another language; they offer, instead, (A) a particular reading of the original — a reading shaped by their own moment, their own ear, and the resources of the target language at the time they happen to be writing."

"Different translators of the same work will, on this view, produce different translations not because some are right and others wrong, but because (B) translation is a form of interpretation, and interpretations multiply as readers and times multiply."

★ paraphrase 対応

本文 "form of interpretation ... interpretations multiply ... shaped by their own moment, their own ear, and the resources"

選択肢② "acknowledge translation as a form of interpretation shaped by their moment, their ear, and the resources of the target language, so different translators legitimately produce different translations"

→ 直接対応。

★ 誤答分析

- ・ ① "deliver 'the same' text ... full equivalence" → 本文と (A) 正反対。現代実践者は equivalence の主張を放棄。
- ・ ③ "reject all classical works ... untranslatable" → (B) 極端化。
- ・ ④ "translate only into their own native language" → (C) 論点ずれ。

【正解】 ② They acknowledge translation as a form of interpretation shaped by their moment, their ear, and the resources of the target language, so different translators legitimately produce different translations.

第7章 (Q6 — Main Idea 設問 + 関連話題・10 分)

文学エッセイの結論は「読者の解放」型。

【設問】 Which of the following best summarizes the author's overall conclusion?

★ 最終段の精読

"The reader who acknowledges that no translation can be 'the original' is freed to (A) read multiple translations of a difficult work as a kind of conversation about it — each version illuminating what the others have left in shadow."

"The reader who chases the chimera of a definitive translation is condemned to perpetual disappointment. The reader who accepts the plural is rewarded with (B) access to a literary work that none of the translators, separately, could have provided alone."

→ 主旨 3 要素:

- ①翻訳は裏切り AND 贈り物
- ②複数翻訳を会話として読む
- ③単独翻訳では得られない作品理解にアクセス可能

★ 選択肢②との対応

"Translation is at once a betrayal and a gift; the reader who accepts the plural — reading multiple translations as a conversation — is rewarded with access to a literary work that no single translator could provide alone."

→ 3 要素すべて含む。

【正解】 ② Translation is at once a betrayal and a gift; the reader who accepts the plural — reading multiple translations as a conversation — is rewarded with access to a literary work that no single translator could provide alone.

★ 関連話題 — 慶應文進学後への接続

・ (A) Walter Benjamin "The Task of the Translator" (1923) — 翻訳論の古典、afterlife 概念の起源

・ (B) Willard Van Orman Quine "Word and Object" (1960) — indeterminacy of translation の哲学的論証

・ (C) Lawrence Venuti "The Translator's Invisibility" — 翻訳者の不可視性批判

- ・ (D) George Steiner "After Babel" (1975) — 解釈学的翻訳論
- ・ (A) 野崎歓・柴田元幸・鴻巣友季子 — 日本の代表的翻訳論者

★ 大学進学後への接続

1 年次: 文学概論・言語学・哲学

2-3 年次: 比較文学ゼミ / 翻訳論ゼミ / 文化研究ゼミ

卒論候補: 村上春樹の英訳比較 / Borges の日本語訳の系譜 / Geist の各国語翻訳史

第8章 (文学部英語 攻略のコツ・5 分)

慶應文長文を完答するための 5 つの技術。

【コツ 1】 二面性 (duality) 構成を予測

文学エッセイは「批判 → 反対側面 → 統合」の duality 構成が典型。"Yet to stop here would be to credit only half the story" のような転換句を見たら、それまでの議論の反対側が来ると予測。

【コツ 2】 多言語フレーズの解釈

- ・ traduttore, traditore (イタリア語: 翻訳者・裏切り者)
- ・ Geist (独: 精神/霊/時代精神/思想 — 多義性)
- ・ wabi (日: 侘び — 翻訳困難な美学概念)

文学部の英文は他言語フレーズを多く含む。各フレーズの「翻訳困難性」自体がエッセイの題材になることが多い。

【コツ 3】 文学・哲学用語の文脈推測

resonance / sediment / equivalence / chimera / interpretation / paradigm / pluralism / hermeneutic / discourse / afterlife

【コツ 4】 誤答パターン 4 種 (文学版)

- ・ (A) 絶対化: full equivalence / mathematically proved / only / definitive
- ・ (B) 極端化: give up entirely / proven impossible / reject all classical works
- ・ (C) 論点ずれ: 翻訳者の報酬・著作権・職業組合 — 哲学的議論の範囲外
- ・ (D) 逆方向: 著者の二面性結論を一方向的に解釈

【コツ 5】 時間配分 (慶應文 120 分・長文比重高)

長文には(A) 35-40 分を割く。複数長文の場合でも一題に手厚く。

【最後にひとこと】

慶應文の英語は(A) 語学試験であると同時に(B) 文学・哲学リテラシー試験。本問の翻訳論は、入学後に学ぶ比較文学・言語哲学・文化研究の核心テーマ。

第9章 (類題チャレンジ・10 分) [10 点]

本講義の手法を応用する 5 問。

(類題 1) 本文中の "resonances" の意味として最も近いものを選びなさい。

- ① 言語が持つ響き・含意・連想
- ② 物理学的共鳴現象
- ③ 国際的影響力
- ④ 詩の韻律のみ

(類題 2) 本文の "historical sediments" が示唆するものとして最も適切なものを選びなさい。

- ① 言語が歴史を通じて蓄積してきた諺・引用・コミックな含意などの層
- ② 考古学的遺物
- ③ 古代文献の物理的損傷
- ④ 国家の歴史教育

(類題 3) 本文中で Quine が引用される目的として最も適切なものを選びなさい。

- ① 「翻訳の不確定性」を gavagai 思考実験で論証した分析哲学者として
- ② 現代翻訳業界の創始者として
- ③ Walter Benjamin の指導教官として
- ④ Murakami 作品の英訳者として

(類題 4) 本文の "chimera" の意味として最も近いものを選びなさい。

- ① 達成不可能な幻想・空想
- ② 古代ギリシャの怪物の解剖学
- ③ 化学物質の合成物
- ④ 数学的に証明された存在

(類題 5) 本文の論理構成として最も近いものを選びなさい。

- ① 格言提示 → 経験的批判 (例示) → 哲学的批判 (Quine) → 反対側面 (gift) → 二面性の統合 → 現代実践者の立場 → 読者の解放
- ② 結論先出し → 根拠列挙のみ
- ③ 賛成意見の単純な列挙
- ④ 歴史的説明のみで結論なし

第10章 (まとめ・宿題・5分)

今日の核心整理と慶應文本番に向けた宿題

【本日の核心 5 か条】

- ① 文学エッセイは (A) 二面性 (duality) 構成 — 「Yet to stop here would be ...」転換句で次の側面が来る。
- ② 多言語フレーズ (traduttore traditore / Geist / wabi / gavagai) が本文の論証材料。
- ③ (B) Benjamin / Quine / Venuti / Steiner の翻訳論系譜を知っていれば論旨予測が容易。
- ④ 修辞設問は「(C) 具体例 → 哲学的論点への橋渡し」を聞く (本問 Q2-Q3)。
- ⑤ 主旨設問は(D) 読者の解放型結論を選ぶ。「mathematically proved / only definitive」は罨。

【宿題】

- ① 本講義の Q1-Q6 を見ないで本文だけ読み直し、自分で 6 問の設問を作成。
- ② 類題 5 問を解き直し、本文 7 段の各段にひと言タイトルを書き出す。
- ③ 過去問: 慶應義塾大学 文学部 英語 (過去 5 年分) から長文 1 題を選び、本日の手法で精読する。

【次回授業】 慶應文の英作文 (300 words 程度) — "Should a difficult literary work be read in translation or only in the original language?" の論理構成

【最後にひとこと】

慶應文の英語は(A) 語学試験であると同時に(B) 文学哲学リテラシー試験。本問の翻訳論は、入学後に学ぶ比較文学・言語哲学の核心テーマ。村上春樹の作品が複数翻訳者によって異なる英語で訳されていること、その違いを楽しめる読者になってください。