関大英語は 90 分・大問 3 題。本問は長文 1 題で 30 分相当。

【例題】(関西大学 社会学部 入試 典型形式・改題)

Read the passage and answer the questions that follow.

For most of human history, the institutions of religion were entwined with almost every dimension of public life. They consecrated marriages, witnessed contracts, marked the rhythm of the year with festivals that no one — believer or otherwise — could entirely ignore. To be born into a society was to be born into a religious community whose rituals one participated in, whose moral vocabulary one absorbed, and whose authorities one consulted at the great turning points of life. Atheism, where it existed at all, was a marginal posture, and even those who privately doubted often kept their doubts to themselves.

Beginning in roughly the seventeenth century in parts of Western Europe, and accelerating sharply after the Second World War, this dense fabric began to unravel. By the early twenty-first century, surveys in many wealthy democracies found that those who described themselves as having no religion had become the largest single category — larger than any individual denomination. The Canadian philosopher Charles Taylor proposed, in an influential book published in 2007, that this transformation deserved a more careful description than the familiar story of "secularization" provides. The familiar story tells of religion losing market share to science, education, and material comfort, as if belief were a kind of consumer product that progressively lost its appeal. Taylor's account is different.

What has changed, Taylor argues, is not so much the rate of belief as the conditions under which belief and unbelief are possible. In a society where everyone, in some sense, presupposes a religious framework, the believer does not have to defend her belief; it is the default. In a society where many people live without such a framework — and live, on the whole, comfortably and morally seriously — religious belief becomes one option among several. The believer of the twenty-first century, even one whose practice resembles that of her grandparents, holds her belief in a different way: as an option she has chosen, against alternatives that are visibly available to her, rather than as a horizon she has simply inherited.

The implications of this shift go beyond the personal experience of religious people themselves. Public institutions that once drew, more or less unselfconsciously, on shared religious assumptions — schools, courts, hospitals — now have to articulate the moral framework within which they operate without being able to assume that their charges share it. The resulting search for a "common public morality" rooted in something other than a particular religious tradition has been one of the principal projects of liberal political philosophy in the past half century, with results that no one, including the philosophers, has found entirely satisfying.

Critics of Taylor's account, both religious and secular, have been numerous. Some religious critics argue that the account understates the persistence of belief: religion has not so much declined as relocated, into forms that are less institutionally visible but no less present in the lives of those who practise them. Some secular critics, by contrast, argue that the account credits to religion a kind of cultural significance it never really had, and that the apparent decline of religion is no more dramatic, or noteworthy, than the decline of any other practice whose social conditions of plausibility have changed.

Taylor's defenders respond that the disagreement is partly about the same evidence interpreted within different frames, and that the strength of the account lies less in any particular empirical claim than in the larger reframing: from a quantitative question (how many people believe what) to a qualitative one (under what conditions does belief, or unbelief, become available to the kind of person one happens to be).

What seems harder to dispute is that the transformation, however it is best described, has consequences that no contemporary society can avoid confronting. The institutions of public life will have to articulate what they take to be common, in a vocabulary that does not simply assume the inherited religious one. The individuals who continue to find religious tradition meaningful will have to articulate what they take from it, in a context where the tradition is no longer simply given. Neither task is easily completed, but neither can be indefinitely postponed.

Q1. According to the first paragraph, what role did religious institutions play for most of human history?

① They were strictly separated from public life.

- ② They were entwined with almost every dimension of public life — consecrating marriages, witnessing contracts, marking the rhythm of the year.
- ③ They were used only by professional clergy.
- ④ They were forbidden by most governments.

Q2. According to Charles Taylor, what is the main weakness of the familiar story of "secularization"?

- ① That it overstates the role of science in moral life.
- ② That it treats belief as a kind of consumer product that progressively lost its appeal, when what has really changed is the conditions under which belief and unbelief are possible.
- ③ That it underestimates the violence of religious institutions.
- ④ That it focuses too much on Western Europe.

Q3. What does Taylor argue distinguishes the twenty-first-century believer from her religious grandparents?

- ① That the contemporary believer holds her belief as an option she has chosen, against alternatives that are visibly available, rather than as a horizon she has simply inherited.
- ② That the contemporary believer is far more devout than her ancestors.
- ③ That the contemporary believer reads only ancient texts.
- ④ That the contemporary believer rejects all modern science.

Q4. Why have public institutions like schools, courts, and hospitals had to "articulate the moral framework within which they operate"?

- ① Because they have been forbidden from doing so by international treaty.
- ② Because they can no longer assume that those they serve share the religious assumptions that once underpinned them.
- ③ Because their staff have become more religious.
- ④ Because their funding now comes entirely from religious organizations.

Q5. Which of the following is NOT cited as a criticism of Taylor's account?

- ① That religion has relocated into less institutionally visible forms rather than truly declining.
- ② That Taylor credits religion with a cultural significance it never had.
- ③ That the disagreement is partly about the same evidence interpreted within different frames.
- ④ That Taylor was secretly funded by religious institutions.

Q6. Which of the following best summarizes the author's overall conclusion?

- ① The transformation, however described, has consequences no contemporary society can avoid: public institutions must articulate what they take to be common without simply assuming an inherited religious vocabulary, and individuals must articulate what they take from religious tradition in a context where it is no longer simply given.
- ② Religion has been definitively proved false and should be abolished.
- ③ The familiar story of secularization is entirely correct and Taylor adds nothing.
- ④ All public institutions should return to explicit religious foundations.

第2章 (解法の全体方針と武器整理・3 分)

関大社会の長文は「歴史的素描 → 通説提示 → 通説批判 → 新理論 → 含意 → 反論 → 統合」の 7 段論法。

【ジャンル分析】

本文は典型的な (A) sociology of religion essay (宗教社会学エッセイ)。著者は 7 段かけて Charles Taylor の「世俗時代」論を紹介し、その論争を整理する。(B) 関大社会の長文は宗教・文化・社会哲学が交差するテーマが頻出。

【本問で必要な 4 つの武器】

- ① (A) 歴史的素描 → 哲学的精緻化 の流れ (第 1-3 段)
- ② (B) familiar story vs Taylor の対比 を読む (量的 vs 質的)
- ③ (C) 宗教社会学用語の文脈推測 — "consecrate" "denomination" "horizon" "plausibility"
- ④ (D) 著者の立場 = Taylor 支持寄りの中立紹介者と読む

【各設問の戦略】

- Q1 (歴史的役割) → 第 1 段 "entwined with almost every dimension of public life"
- Q2 (familiar story 批判) → 第 2 段 "as if belief were a kind of consumer product"
- Q3 (現代信者の特徴) → 第 3 段 "an option she has chosen ... rather than ... a horizon she has simply inherited"
- Q4 (公的制度) → 第 4 段 "can no longer assume that ... share religious assumptions"
- Q5 (NOT 設問・批判) → 第 5 段の批判リストから外れる選択肢
- Q6 (全体結論) → 最終段 "no contemporary society can avoid confronting"

第3章 (Q1 + Q2 — 歴史的役割 + familiar story 批判・8 分)

「現状認識 + 通説批判」を続けて聞く。

【Q1 設問】 What role did religious institutions play for most of human history?

★ 第 1 段の論理

"the institutions of religion were (A) entwined with almost every dimension of public life. They (B) consecrated marriages, witnessed contracts, marked the rhythm of the year with festivals"

★ Q1 paraphrase

本文 "entwined with almost every dimension ... consecrated marriages, witnessed contracts, marked the rhythm of the year"

選択肢② "entwined with almost every dimension of public life — consecrating marriages, witnessing contracts, marking the rhythm of the year"

→ 直接対応。

【Q1 正解】 ② They were entwined with almost every dimension of public life — consecrating marriages, witnessing contracts, marking the rhythm of the year.

【Q2 設問】 What is the main weakness of the familiar story of "secularization"?

★ 第 2 段の論理

"The familiar story tells of religion losing market share to science, education, and material comfort, (A) as if belief were a kind of consumer product that progressively lost its appeal. Taylor's account is different."

第 3 段に Taylor の対案: "What has changed, Taylor argues, is not so much the rate of belief as (B) the conditions under which belief and unbelief are possible."

★ Q2 paraphrase

本文 "as if belief were a kind of consumer product ... conditions under which belief and unbelief are possible"

選択肢② "treats belief as a kind of consumer product that progressively lost its appeal, when what has really changed is the conditions under which belief and unbelief are possible"

→ 直接対応。

【Q2 正解】② That it treats belief as a kind of consumer product that progressively lost its appeal, when what has really changed is the conditions under which belief and unbelief are possible.

第4章 (Q3 — 現代信者の特徴・5 分)

Taylor の核心命題を読む。

【設問】 What does Taylor argue distinguishes the twenty-first-century believer from her grandparents?

★ 第 3 段の論理

"The believer of the twenty-first century, even one whose practice resembles that of her grandparents, holds her belief in a different way: as (A) an option she has chosen, against alternatives that are visibly available to her, rather than as (B) a horizon she has simply inherited."

★ paraphrase 対応

本文 "an option she has chosen ... rather than ... a horizon she has simply inherited"

選択肢① "holds her belief as an option she has chosen, against alternatives that are visibly available, rather than as a horizon she has simply inherited"

→ 直接対応。

★ 誤答分析

- ・ ② "far more devout" → (A) 本文に信仰の深さ比較なし。
- ・ ③ "reads only ancient texts" → (B) 無関係。
- ・ ④ "rejects all modern science" → (C) 本文に科学拒絶なし。

【正解】 ① That the contemporary believer holds her belief as an option she has chosen, against alternatives that are visibly available, rather than as a horizon she has simply inherited.

💡 重要概念: "option" vs "horizon". Taylor が "A Secular Age" (2007) で展開した中核区別。 option は意識的選択、horizon は無自覚な前提条件。

第5章 (Q4 + Q5 — 公的制度 + NOT 設問・10 分)

「含意 + 批判の整理」を続けて聞く。

【Q4 設問】 Why have public institutions like schools, courts, and hospitals had to "articulate the moral framework"?

★ 第 4 段の論理

"Public institutions that once drew, more or less unselfconsciously, on shared religious assumptions — schools, courts, hospitals — now have to articulate the moral framework within which they operate (A) without being able to assume that their charges share it."

★ Q4 paraphrase

本文 "without being able to assume that their charges share it"

選択肢② "they can no longer assume that those they serve share the religious assumptions that once underpinned them"

→ 直接対応。

【Q4 正解】 ② Because they can no longer assume that those they serve share the religious assumptions that once underpinned them.

【Q5 設問】 Which of the following is NOT cited as a criticism of Taylor's account?

★ 第 5-6 段の批判リスト

- ・ (i) 宗教側批判: "religion has not so much declined as (A) relocated, into forms that are less institutionally visible"
- ・ (ii) 世俗側批判: Taylor が宗教に "(B) a kind of cultural significance it never really had" を与えた
- ・ (iii) Taylor 派の応答: "the disagreement is partly about (C) the same evidence interpreted within different frames"

★ 選択肢と照合

- ・ ① "religion has relocated" → 根拠 (i) 下線A : ○
- ・ ② "credits religion with cultural significance it never had" → 根拠 (ii) 下線A : ○
- ・ ③ "same evidence interpreted within different frames" → 根拠 (iii) 下線A : ○ (Taylor 派の 応答だが、本文に言及あり)

- ・④ "Taylor was secretly funded by religious institutions" → (B) 本文に資金疑惑なし

【正解】④ That Taylor was secretly funded by religious institutions.

💡 NOT 設問の罣: 「学者の動機を疑う」(資金・偏見・政治的立場) 系は真面目な学術エッセイでは使われない。Taylor 自身がカトリック信者であることは関係なく、議論の中身で論じる。

Taylor 論争の三項対立

図 5-1 世俗化論争 — Taylor 説が両側 (宗教側 / 世俗側) から批判される構図

第6章 (Q6 — Main Idea 設問 + 関連話題・10 分)

宗教社会学エッセイの結論は「双方の articulation の必要性」型。

【設問】 Which of the following best summarizes the author's overall conclusion?

★ 最終段の精読

"What seems harder to dispute is that the transformation, however it is best described, has (A) consequences that no contemporary society can avoid confronting. The institutions of public life will have to (B) articulate what they take to be common, in a vocabulary that does not simply assume the inherited religious one. The individuals who continue to find religious tradition meaningful will have to (C) articulate what they take from it, in a context where the tradition is no longer simply given."

→ 主旨 3 要素:

- ①変容そのものは認めざるをえない
- ②公的制度の双方向的説明責任 (宗教抜きで「共通」を語る)
- ③個人の双方向的説明責任 (伝統が前提でない文脈で価値を語る)

★ 選択肢①との対応

"The transformation, however described, has consequences no contemporary society can avoid: public institutions must articulate what they take to be common without simply assuming an inherited religious vocabulary, and individuals must articulate what they take from religious tradition in a context where it is no longer simply given."

→ 3 要素すべて含む。

【正解】 ① The transformation, however described, has consequences no contemporary society can avoid: public institutions must articulate what they take to be common without simply assuming an inherited religious vocabulary, and individuals must articulate what they take from religious tradition in a context where it is no longer simply given.

第7章 (関大社会英語 攻略のコツ・5 分)

関大社会長文を完答するための 5 つの技術。

【コツ 1】 7 段論法 (歴史 → 通説 → 通説批判 → 新理論 → 含意 → 反論 → 統合) を予測

【コツ 2】 宗教社会学者の固有名詞

- ・ (A) Charles Taylor / Max Weber / Peter Berger / José Casanova — 世俗化論の系譜

【コツ 3】 関大社会頻出語の文脈推測

consecrate / denomination / horizon / option / inherited / articulate / framework / unselfconsciously / plausibility / relocate

【コツ 4】 誤答パターン 4 種 (関大社会版)

- ・ (A) 学者の動機批判: secretly funded / biased — 真面目な学術論争では使われない
- ・ (B) 極端化: definitively proved false / abolished / entirely correct
- ・ (C) 論点ずれ: 国際関係・経済成長 — 宗教社会学の範囲外
- ・ (D) 逆方向: familiar story 派と Taylor 派を取り違える

【コツ 5】 時間配分 (関大 90 分)

長文には(A) 30 分を上限。他の大問に時間を残す。

第8章 (類題チャレンジ・10 分) [10 点]

本講義の手法を応用する 5 問。

(類題 1) 本文中の "consecrated" の意味として最も近いものを選びなさい。

- ① 聖別した・神聖化した
- ② 中止した
- ③ 解散した
- ④ 禁止した

(類題 2) 本文の "horizon" が示唆するものとして最も適切なものを選びなさい。

- ① 無自覚な前提条件・地平
- ② 物理的な水平線
- ③ 経済成長の上限
- ④ 教育の目標

(類題 3) 本文中で Charles Taylor が引用される目的として最も適切なものを選びなさい。

- ① 世俗化を「条件の変化」として再定式化したカナダの哲学者として
- ② ヨーロッパの世俗化を最初に予言した社会学者として
- ③ 本文の著者の指導教官として
- ④ 現代の宗教指導者として

(類題 4) 本文の "plausibility" の意味として最も近いものを選びなさい。

- ① もっともらしさ・社会的に信じる度合い
- ② 経済的な実現可能性
- ③ 法的な合法性
- ④ 物理的な可視性

(類題 5) 本文の論理構成として最も近いものを選びなさい。

- ① 歴史的素描 → familiar story 提示 → Taylor の批判 → option/horizon 区別 → 公的制
度への含意 → 両側からの批判 → Taylor 派応答 → 統合的結論
- ② 結論先出し → 根拠列举のみ
- ③ 賛成意見の単純な列举
- ④ 歴史的説明のみで結論なし

第9章 (まとめ・宿題・5 分)

今日の核心整理と関大本番に向けた宿題

【本日の核心 5 か条】

- ① 宗教社会学エッセイは (A) 「通説 vs 新理論」 の対立構造が骨格。
- ② Taylor の (B) option vs horizon 区別は本文の核心。
- ③ NOT 設問は「(C) 学者の動機批判」(secretly funded 等) が罠。
- ④ 修辞設問は「(D) 量的 vs 質的」の認識転換を聞く。
- ⑤ 主旨設問は(A) 「双方の articulation の必要性」型を選ぶ。

【宿題】

- ① 本講義の Q1-Q6 を見ないで本文だけ読み直し、自分で 6 問の設問を作成。
- ② 類題 5 問を解き直し、本文 7 段の各段にひと言タイトルを書き出す。
- ③ 過去問: 関西大学 社会学部 英語 (過去 5 年分) から長文 1 題を選び、本日の手法で精読する。

【最後にひとこと】

関大社会の英語は(A) 語学試験であると同時に(B) 宗教社会学リテラシー試験。本問の世俗化論は、入学後に学ぶ宗教社会学・文化社会学の核心テーマ。
